COTTON MARRETS.

New York, January is The cotton market was nervous and unsettled during to-day's trading, as early advance, attributed to a bullish construction of the census report on the domestic mill stocke and a charp buller in the price of Expitian cotton, being followed by a reaction on renorts that pleking and sinning were being resumed on a more active scale in the South, with the close steady at a net decline of its I points. Last prices here were at the low-cet point of the day on latest deliveries.
